Chatter, Conversation And Commentary

By Ike Gardner

James Nunnelly, his birth name, is truly a human chameleon. A chameleon because he adapts very well into a multitude of environments. He is a devoted worker in the Palestine Missionary Baptist church; he has distinguished himself as a noted medical administration; he is currently the outstanding czar of COMBAT; and he is one of the stars of the "Generation Rap" radio program. Most importantly he is a devout family man, as his pulchritudinous wife, his two children, Zel and Duna, and his four grandchildren, Cool Rae, and the Nunnelly boys will testify. Though not a charter member (he hates to be reminded of that), he became associated with the Monday Niter Footballers in the early '70s. He has done more singlehandedly to raise our presence in the community than all the rest of us combined. As a Chameleon of course, he has many names. Some know him as "The Commissioner" of Monday Night Football, some know him as Nun, many call him Jim, and as one of the stars of Generation Rap, he is known as "Grand Dad". I can't print what Sandra Hubbard, who knows the real man, calls him. But what is not well known is what the old folks call him. They have known him since he was wearing diapers and running around bare-footed in Columbia, Mo. They all know him and now you know him as "Doodle Bug". So the next time you see him in the halls of the Jackson County Courthouse, or the offices of state executives or at the 02, just give him a high five and a "Hi Doodle Bug".
