Quote Of The Week

"In the words of Jake Gaither, former football coach at Florida A&M university, 'players should be agile, hostile, and mobile.' The Chiefs are neither. Lord knows, I am truly dumb-founded."

Chatter, Conversation And Commentary

BRONCOS RIDING HIGH INTO ARROWHEAD . . . Hats off to Charles Allen, Carl Clark and yours truly for accurately predicting a Chiefs' victory over the Carolina Panthers. While the stadium was half empty, the win did fuel a refreshing renewal of hopes for an 8-8 season. Interesting that the up-and-coming Denver Broncos are coming to Arrowhead. Chances are that the Chiefs will put a hurting on Denver, just because the Chiefs are on a roll.

MEET THE MONDAY NITERS . . . These guys have been watching football together for over 30 years each Monday Night for as long as there has been a Monday Night Football telecast. Most of what we do is talk, talk, talk, not only about football but social issues, educational goals, and a lot about family. Sometimes we argue, some more than others, but always leave as friends. Football is only a reason to get together, and each Monday night is another opportunity. Here they are, as I see (and hear) them:

Dr. Charles Allen - a private dentist who is extremely dedicated to his patients. Usually quiet and mild mannered. Charles is a Chiefs fan no matter what their record. In 30 years, he remains relentless in helping the Chiefs re-achieve the glory of years past.

Paul Booker - another quiet, unassuming, likable kind of guy. Has helped many young people add structure to their lives. More importantly, is a staunch pragmatist who always calls it like he sees it. Has called the Chiefs heartless and devoid of leadership. Currently leads all Monday Niters in predictions.

Carl Clark - a high school quarterback and a sports car enthusiast. He is quick witted and has many friends in high places. Used to be undaunting in his support for the Chiefs but lately has turned to being practical in his predictions. Is currently a leader in accurate predictions.

Ike Gardner - a retired educator and administrator with the Kansas City, Mo., School district. Prides himself in knowing about football and a host of other subjects. While criticizing the Chiefs and voting against them often, he is still very much a Chiefs fan. A long-time season ticket holder, he blends his sports time with love for his church and pastor, the Rev. Emanual Cleaver.

Lloyd Greenfield - a retired firefighter, now a real estate professional. Is helping people achieve their life-long goal of home ownership. Lloyd is a practical fan, who just loves the game of football, sometimes quiet and a very deep thinker with a fondness for the arts.

Ollie Hubbard - loves to make original commentary, especially relating his predictions to real life experiences. A good cook and a walking newspaper who knows lot of Kansas City people. Also a former educator, who uses his winning ways to get things done. Is very comfortable not working every day.

Jim Nunnelly - one of the few Monday Niters who is still working. Likes his job as the COMBAT administrator and tries to get addicts needed treatment. He also likes his role on the KPRS Hot 103 JAMZ Generation Rap show as "Grand Dad."

Ed West - a computer ace who helps people set up their home computers. Almost made it to professional football following a collegiate career at Pittsburg State university. Fascinated by electronics and football. Clearly a gadget fan that likes helping all people. Knowledgeable.

So, there you have the guys who week after week think and talk football. More important, they all love the game of football and never tire of talking about it. We thank each of you for sharing our experience through this column. Our best to you this Holiday season.
