Monday Nite Footballers Predictions

By Jim "Grand Dad" Nunnelly
Predicting Since 1970

Detroit Lions vs. Kansas City Chiefs
12 p.m., WDAF-TV 4

Charles, Allen (11)
Chiefs by 14
Detroit kittens have been tamed

Paul Booker (10)
Chiefs by 14
No contest at all!

Carl Clark (11)
Chiefs by 7
These Lions will not roar

Bubba Cleaver (12)
Chiefs by 17
Motown is coming to the wrong town

Ike Gardner (10)
Chiefs by 6
Lions with no teeth; Chiefs with no feathers

Lloyd Greenfield (11)
Chiefs by 7
Lions are reduced to lambs

Ollie Hubbard (11)
Chiefs by 14
Motown is a music town; K.C. is known for barbeque and butt-kicking

Jim Nunnelly (11)
Chiefs by 20
Priest, Morton, Gonzalez, Dante, Kennison

Ed West (11)
Chiefs by 14
Good thing Barry Sanders retired

Conversation, Commentary and Chatter

Okay, Chiefs' fans everywhere seem to be recovering nicely from last week's reality check (the embarrassing beating from the Denver Broncos). Now, come on, everybody in the country knew that the Chiefs would not go 16-0 (except maybe Charles Allen). And we are not that far removed from the days when the Chiefs would just blow everything. And, of course, we knew the offense would fail one day, and openly demonstrate just how weak our run defense really is. And it all happened, out in Denver, last Sunday. The Broncos beat the Chiefs so badly in the second half, when the Chiefs' highly-touted offense just plain quit. The Chiefs performed just miserably, as they have been known to do. The mistakes they made were unexplainably dumb. Then, too, Monday Niters expected that Denver, Minnesota, and Cincinnati would be formidable opponents, because of an otherwise easy schedule. So once again, the early season. They have to crank up the offense, so as to conceal the often-exposed, vulnerably sub-par defense. That means Priest will have to get more touches; and the sometimey receivers will have to catch more and run further after the catch. It's funky but it's fair. It's like that and that's the way it is. Just like Bubba, Ike, and Ed said it was. By the way, the Chiefs will clinch the AFC West by beating up on the roar-less Detroit Lions. What a difference a week can make.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.