Quote Of The Week

"I hate to see that evening sun go down...on the Chiefs...that is. Sunday will show how far removed the Chiefs are from becoming a contender. St. Louis is too fast, too deep, too balanced, and too diversified. The Chiefs will lose bigtime. (Ollie says he'll lose 100 pounds if the Chiefs win!)"

Chatter, Conversation And Commentary

TOO MANY CHIEFS AND NOT ENOUGH YARDS – If William Shakespeare were alive today, he would say that old adage would summarize the Chiefs and their ineffective, five-man running back system. On first hearing, one may think that if we keep fresh backs in the game, it will wear down the defense and one of the quintet will break one or two for one or two touchdowns. The ridiculousness of this system was in full force last week against Oakland, when these fresh backs only gained a mere 60 yards on the ground. Richardson stumbled while Anders ambled while Moreau moped while Cloud continued to further cloudy the situation. The time has come for the Chiefs to decide that one running back is going to carry the ball and that's it. Coach Cunningham announced Wednesday that Kimble Anders will be the Chiefs starting running back on Sunday. That decision will surely result in more yardage, more scoring, and even better passing game. No other NFL team employs such a medieval, terribly outdated system, leaving opponents completely unmoved by this pigskin, group therapy. If the Chiefs decide to change, they can anticipate a win on Sunday. If they continue with this proven nonsense, they will slip into another year without playoff participation and their fourth loss. St. Louis is highly favored but a Chiefs' victory is not out of the question.

IMANI HOUSE, A LEADER IN EFFECTIVE DRUG TREATMENT – A few months ago, Imani House of the Swope Parkway Health center, was one of the 37 COMBAT agencies participating in an outcomes fair. Highlighting culturally relevant treatment systems, Imani House reports that four out of five clients are drug-free at the time of discharge. About the same number are employed or have received relevant employment training. Imani provides a panoply of services, including out-patient, inpatient and HIV components.
